Lumion Pro 9.5 Download Lumion Standard Category:2015 software, only two-thirds of non-OECD high-income countries had a national obesity strategy. Although a few low-income countries had one, almost all had no national strategy for physical activity. Physical activity and nutrition policy and practice recommendations were either absent or very short on country level or had no target date given. More than half the countries that had national nutrition strategies (n=5) had a target date for the year 2025. This target date was specified as a date when the malnutrition situation would be ameliorated or "stabilized". In addition, more than half of the countries (n=6) that had a nutrition strategy that specified a target date for the year 2025 had no target for the year 2030 and had no target for the year 2050. One was deemed suitable for 2025 but did not specify a target year for 2030. Half of the countries that had a physical activity policy (n=4) had a target date for the year 2025. One was suitable for 2030, one for 2050 but did not specify a target year and one had no target date. Three had a policy that did not have a specified target year for either 2030 or 2050. One of the four countries that had a national strategy for physical activity and nutrition had no target date for the year 2025. No nation-level strategy had a target date for the year 2030 or 2050. None had a target date for the year 2035, a specified target year for 2030, for 2050, or a target for the year 2065. Discussion (#S005) ===== This analysis was undertaken to provide a resource for global nutrition and physical activity policy and practice. It identified a key gap in nutrition, physical activity and obesity-related policy and practice by the year 2015. The key findings include the following: - Most countries (n=19) reported that the focus on physical activity is increasing or stable but that they still have no national strategy for physical activity. - All countries (n=19) reported that the focus on nutrition is increasing or stable. However, eight countries had no nutrition-related policy, eleven had only a short document or were in a process to develop one, and ten had no physical activity and/or nutrition policy or strategy. - Fourteen countries reported that they have not planned for the year 2015.
