Say a question asks about how to take great photos with a Canon DSLR. Many questions like that are really off topic, they are not about photography in general. But for the sake of not having one rule over another, I'm going to adopt the new policy of allowing such questions. Even if it means that the one rule rule will be broken. A: I suppose most of the "favourite" type of questions will not even get that far. It's the bottom of the barrel for best. This would be a place for helping someone just starting with DSLR photography, or for getting help on accessories, or for getting a general idea of best practices for that type of camera. Things that would be off topic for this but would fit for the Stack Exchange network. A: Definitely. I think some of them would probably qualify as "opinion based" questions, but most of them could be answered in a factual, non-opinion based manner, so I think they would be on topic.
